valiant rescue work. A Pennsylvania man has established a dog college, in which one branch of the training given consists in drills for efficient rescue work. These dogs are trained to make a long leap from the shore when a drowning person is located at some distance out. This lessens both the fatigue and the time consumed in swimming, enabling the dog to reach the sufferer more speedily. The dogs are also taught to clutch the person by clothing at the back of the neck in order to avoid being choked to death by tightly gripping arms.

New inventions to aid in life saving work are being brought forward each year. Some are impractical and of little value. Most of the best are the result of ideas gained by men who have had long experience and know just what dangers need to be most guarded against. The most complete lifesaving apparatus for use at a watering place has been designed by George Freeth, a Pacific coast life guard with a long line of rescues to his credit. His invention consists of a high power motorcycle capable of a speed of seventy miles an hour while carrying a side car, the body of which is a six foot box. This box contains all of the apparatus needed for the spedy resuscitation of a drowned persons, including the pulmotor. This cycle was first used at Redondo Beach., Calif., but is now being rapidly introduced at other re-

This buoy is capable of sustaining the weight of two men in the water. It is attached to a leather belt which

The United States life saving service is engaged chiefly in the res-cue of persons from ship-wreckd vessels, and has made as many as 10,000 rescues during a single year. The American seacoast is divided into thirteen life saving districts with nearly 300 stations manned by carefully trained men. The stations are of three classes: complete life saving stations with resident crews; lifeboat stations, with a resident keeper in charge; and volunteer crews and provisioned houses of refuge in Dogs play an important part in the life saving work of many seaside resorts. At Atlantic City for years a sorts. At Atlantic City for years a trained does have been designed during the year. force of trained dogs has been maintained to supplement the work of the life guards. These faithful animals are especially valuable in rescuing child bathers who have gotten beyond their depths or have become panic stricken and therefore unable to care for themselves. At Cape May, a resident kept five large animals at his own expense, because they had voluntarily taken upon themselves the pa-trol of the beach. They were all tray dogs who had happened along when there were need of their service, and by prompt action won a good home. At Revere Beach, Mass., a number of dogs belonging to wealthy residents in the vicinity are to be seen upon the beach during most hours of the day, their keen sense ever on the alert to note a need
